Introduction

Branchless banking has come out globally as the most innovative alternate delivery channel in recent years. Mobile banking has successfully accelerated financial inclusion and changed the financial landscape in many developing countries. Mobile phones are compensating for inadequate infrastructure, slow postal services, and the limited coverage of banking systems in these countries.

Extending the outreach of financial services to the un-banked/underserved/areas and people - belonging mostly to the low income strata of the society - in a cost effective manner is viewed as a big step towards poverty alleviation. Emerging advances in information and communication technologies and their widespread usage offer tremendous opportunity to achieve this much desired goal by making available non-traditional ways of providing financial services. However these alternate delivery channels should be looked into prudently and adopted only after careful balancing of risks and rewards. As regulators our role is not to try to eliminate these risks, but to balance them appropriately with the benefits of using these new channels and to create an enabling regulatory environment where new technologies are put to use on the efficient frontiers of the risk-return tradeoff.
